

Didier Andouche, Lieutenant colonel, Communication and Information System Directorate European Union Military Staff (EUMS)

Didier Andouche joined the French army in 1985 as an infantry officer. After his graduation as engineer in Telecommunications and Information processing, he has been assigned on different positions in development and capability solutions from technical architect on Internet technologies to program manager for classified networks in French General Staff.

In the meantime, he has been deployed as chief CIS overseas in different operations where France was involved, and conducted the validation of the concept of battlefield's digitalization at brigade level implementing the use of Satellite resources on the move and on the pause.

Seconded to the EU Military Staff since 2016, he is in charge of different projects utilizing Satcom and referent for EDA and EU commission for Space military PSDC usages.